28% or more of children's television shows contain four or more acts of violence

Research indicates that media violence has not just increased in quantity; it has also become more graphic, sexual, and sadistic.

"that exposure to media violence causes children to behave more aggressively and affects them as adults years later."

University of Michigan professor L. Rowell Huesmann argues that fifty years of evidence shows...

- compare the behavior of 24 children watching TV
- 1/2 violent episode of the cartoon Woody Woodpecker
- 1/2 non-violent cartoon, The Little Red Hen

100 preschool children into four groups.

- Group One Real
- Group Two Real on TV
- Group Three Cartoon Version
- Group Four Nothing

"Listeners are capable of recognizing themes of music (i.e. violence, sex, suicide, and Satanism) even when it is difficult to comprehend specific lyric content."

(Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 2003, Vol. 84, No. 5, 960-971)

Teenagers who listen to music with degrading sexual messages are twice more prone to start their sex life in the following two year period than those who listen to little or no such music.
