Retirement Remains Americans' Top Financial Worry

Middle-aged Americans most concerned about retirement

by Andrew Dugan

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A firm majority of Americans, 59%, are worried about not having enough money for retirement, surpassing eight other financial matters. A majority of Americans have reported being "very" or "moderately" worried about retirement savings every year since 2001, illustrating that saving for retirement disquiets Americans in both good and bad economic times.

Americans' Top Financial Concerns

Next, please tell me how concerned you are right now about each of the following financial matters, based on your current financial situation -- are you very worried, moderately worried, not too worried, or not worried at all?

	Very worried/ Moderately worried	Not too worried/ Not at all worried
Not having enough money for retirement	59	35
Not being able to pay medical costs in the event of a serious illness or accident	53	45
Not being able to maintain the standard of living you enjoy	48	52

The background is a dense, colorful collage of hand-drawn arrows. The arrows are in various colors including red, yellow, green, blue, and white, and they point in many different directions, creating a sense of movement and chaos. Overlaid on this background is a solid blue oval. Inside the oval, the words "THE CAUSE" are written in a bold, white, blocky font with a distressed, torn-paper texture. The letters are slightly shadowed, giving them a three-dimensional appearance as if they are floating above the oval.
